Impeccably crafted, meticulously detailed and luxuriously defined; the FBC London Contemporary Objects present the crucial craft movements in present-day design.

As part of the commitment to continuously drive both design and product innovation, FBC London have forged relationships with emerging talent from the world’s most exciting and ambitious designers, craft-makers and innovators to celebrate the universal power of design and collective futures.

Bridging the gap between a gallery and retail store, FBC London is proud to represent the new generation of artists who have the power to push the limits between art and craft, encouraging artists to push boundaries within their practice; creating new and exclusive Objects.

This collection presents a selection of Objects. Luxurious in their diverse materiality, created with innovative resources and finishing, giving a vanguard edge to the collection. Showcasing studio-created works alongside one-of-a-kind and limited-edition pieces, a creative vision and strong curatorial focus create the unconditional narrative that is FBC London.

These Contemporary Objects allows the connoisseur to embrace the desire to invest in raw talent of contemporary production and understated exclusivity.

STEPH BLACK |

A ceramic artist based in Harrogate, Yorkshire, Steph Black’s contemporary Vessels are made of earthenware and stoneware, thrown and fired in an oxidized atmosphere. The addition of paper clay and silicon carbide to the glaze achieve an eroded tactile appearance to the surface of some work. This technique enhances the characteristic of the surface and its composition of both types of clay. Steph has always been inspired by weathered surfaces and what can be found beneath and is able to express that feeling through her chosen medium of ceramics.

NATHALIE DEROUET

French artist Nathalie Derouet lives and works in Douarnenez, north-western France. The inspiration behind these pieces are taken from Chinese and Japanese ceramics. Countries where refinement and sophistication are present in many everyday objects, reflecting tradition and modernity. The purity and simplicity of these extremely thin designs is highlighted with the smooth surfaces and uniqueness of each piece.

JANE TOWERS

Recently graduated in design crafts from De Montfort University, Jane Towers has spent twenty years as a stained glass artist. She trained as a ceramicist later to push the boundaries of craftsmanship. Jane's current vessels: Polistinae and Velutina are based on the theme of wasps nests and how they are formed in layers. These vessels, exclusive Objects at FBC London, are made of porcelain and high fired then re-fired with gold lustre containing 10% real gold.

Zsolt Jozsef Simon, a Hungarian ceramic artist, figuratively and literally needs movement to help his materials find their natural form in order to create his sculptures. Considered as one of the most innovative contemporary potters, he is extremely well-known internationally. His work draws critical acclaim as his ideas, philosophical explorations and technical skill have leapt forward with every new experiment and every exhibition. In 2006 received the same year an honorable mention prize at the ceramic Biennale of Korea.
Tessa Eastman worked in London and France as an assistant to renowned British ceramicist Kate Malone before she set up her first studio in 2005 in West London. This intriguing ceramic sculpture explores the challenges of complex arrangements of clay, a mixture of glossy and dry glazes, fired numerous times, to provide coarse and smooth effects. The aim of this practice is to generate beautiful forms in the most bizarre manner to aid the appreciation of life’s absurdities where things don’t always make sense. The pieces overlook detail such as cloud, bone, crystal, and microscopic plant systems.
CRYSTAL COLLECTION

Traditional Czech glass craft techniques are combined with the latest design and technology to make the Bohemian cut crystal. Pioneering in the design and a symbol of quality, beauty and lasting value, this genuine Object is to be handed down from generation to generation. The in-house traditional cutting machines and tools creates a marriage of traditional methods and modern technology. Delicate and hand blown the glass is amalgamated with automatic precise crystal cutting to form exceptionally unique and individual pieces.

UTOPIA & UTILITY

Their designs marry function and poetic design, and frequently incorporate mixed media, including glass, copper, ceramics, and wood. Utopia & Utility creates whimsical objects that utilise traditional materials in innovative ways. The belief is that everything that deserves to be made, deserves to be made well. From the process to the finished objects, their motivation is to enrich life through beauty. Each vessel is truly unique and one-of-a-kind.

GLASS COLLECTION

A unique figure in the field of creative glass blowing experimenting with a formal resilience and magic of glass. Bold, irreverent and offbeat, the Paris-based artist creates interesting results by fusing glass with other materials such as wire netting, rope and fibreglass to create thematic collections. Expertly handling glass in its various forms and systematically creating collections comprising entirely of unique pieces as a result of a process that remains random., the technical mastery and artistry is unfounded. Today, eight signature pieces are integral to the permanent collections at the Museum of Decorative Arts in 2015.

MARK STURKENBOOM |
Mark Sturkenboom, formerly a welder before graduating with honors in 2012 at Artez, Institute for the Arts in Arnhem. The designer set out to envision what humanity’s discarded decorations will look like thousands of years in the future, cluttered as the planet is with our numerous objects. ‘Overgrown’ is a collection of candleholders designed to look like relics from a “desolate, flooded world.” Mark weaves together histories, he composites the living memory with the permanence of genuine mediums. Offering the everlasting object, balanced with the fragility of human experience.
